

THE GOOD GAMING GUIDE

A PARENT'S GUIDE TO VIDEO GAMES

IN ASSOCIATION WITH

Today's video games can be a great way to bring the family together for endless hours of harmless fun.

The remarkable value of games for children has never been in much doubt. They can do everything from teach tots valuable motor skills using a mouse to helping youngsters understand such relatively complex issues as the history of mankind through games like Civilization.

The very best gaming is always safe gaming – which means games should be played responsibly. The ideal way to ensure that your children and teenagers are playing the right games – and playing sensibly – is to take an active interest in what they are playing.

But more than that, as parents or guardians you can also take direct control of just what games your children play at home – and even how they play them and for how long. Over the next few pages we detail sound advice and parental controls.

Whether your children play on a PC or one of the latest consoles – Microsoft's Xbox 360, Nintendo's Wii or Sony's PlayStation 3 – their gaming choices can be safely steered by you and in this leaflet we tell you how.

The UK's game industry also funds Ask About Games – a website offering advice, insight and further reading. Feel free to check it out at

Play Safe Gaming Tips

- Engage. Find out what your children are playing and take an interest. Better still, join in the fun and play alongside them yourself!
- Lighten up. Games should be played in well-lit rooms. Darkened rooms, where games are played on old CRT (cathode ray tube) tv sets, have been known to trigger epilepsy issues amongst some children.
- Take breaks. Some games can be especially intense, so regular breaks are vital for healthy gameplay. Encourage your children to take regular breaks – at least five minutes every 45-60 minutes as a rule of thumb.

PEGI RATINGS

The Pan-European Game Information (PEGI) age rating system was established in 2003 to help parents make informed decisions when buying video games.

PEGI operates in 29 countries and the British games industry was a moving force in establishing the system several years ago. The PEGI ratings give an indication of the type of content found in a game and its suitability.

As well as PEGI age ratings, game packaging also carries PEGI descriptors that help explain the kind of content that might be found in a particular game. Descriptors appear as a set of icons that cover such themes as fear, bad language, violence and drugs.

Most publishers that are signed up to the PEGI rating system are also part of the PEGI Online scheme. PEGI Online extends the comprehensive PEGI age ratings scheme to the online environment.

Increasingly games are being played online against many players at a time and often across many country borders. So PEGI Online was devised to give parents greater peace of mind when their children play multiplayer games in the online arena.

Under the current rating system in the UK, some games for older players are rated by the BBFC (British Board of Film Classification) at potentially 12, 15 and 18. It is an offence for a retailer to sell BBFC rated games to anyone younger than 12, 15 or 18 respectively.
